

HOME Competition 2019

RESULTS RELEASED

arch out loud challenged competition entrants to push the boundaries of adaptability and innovation when considering the future of HOME.

PRESS STATEMENT Architectural initiative arch out loud has released the winners of its' HOME Competition 2019, an annual competition where designers are asked "What is the future of HOME?" Proposals from all over the world were submitted to the competition and approached this question from three main perspectives: innovation, adaptability, and pragmatism.

The Home remains the most significant architectural place we experience throughout our lives. Home represents safety, ownership, privacy, and stability. Home is where we can be alone and with people we care about most. Historically, the home has been a place of permanence. Despite how chaotic our lives are, we cherish the consistency of sleeping in the same bed and performing the same daily rituals here. Yet, new trends in digitalization and globalization continue to reshape realms of everyday life and alter our physical environments, including our homes. It is important to examine how we adapt our living spaces to these shifts.

The HOME competition invited all designers to explore ideas of domestic architecture for the future. Designers considered the impacts of global population shifts, the proximity of major cities to coastlines, new materials and building techniques, as well as the rise of co-housing, tiny homes, smart houses and marketplaces like Airbnb. The HOME Competition creates a platform to speculate the ways new technological, political, environmental and cultural changes can redefine the spaces where we live.
